The aim of this work was to analyze the effects of three viscoplastic additives (1% of magnesium hydroxide, 1% of gelatine and 1% of β -tricalcium phosphate [TCP]) on the flow properties of magnesium hydroxyapatite (MgHAp) cement. The viscosity and yield stress values of the MgHAp-based cements increased from 0.5 to 2.5 and 15 to 40 kPa, respectively, after the addition of the viscoplastic additives. The pore structure of the cement was changed after the addition of β -TCP and gelatine. The addition of viscoplastic additives to magnesium HAp cements did not change its setting time, setting pressure or setting temperature. However, this study showed that the addition of viscoplastic additives causes a change in the setting mechanism of the MgHAp-based cements, and the pore structure of the cement was changed
